NATURE'S NOBLEMAN.

BY MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER.

Away with false fashion, so calm and so chill,
Where pleasure itself cannot please,
Away with cold breeding, that faithless still
Affects to be quite at its ease:
For the deepest in feeling is highest in rank,
The freest is first in the band,
And nature's own nobleman, friendly and frank,
Is a man with his heart in his hand.

Fearless in honesty, gentle yet just,
He warmly can love and can hate,
Nor will he bow down with his face in the dust
To Fashion's intolerant state:
For best in good breeding, and highest in rank,
Though lowly or poor in the land,
Is nature's own nobleman, friendly and frank,
The man with his heart in his hand.

His fashion is passion, sincere and intense,
His impulses simple and true,
Yet tempered by judgment, and taught by good sense,
And ev'rid with me and with you:
For the finest in manners, as highest in rank,
It is your man! or your man! who stands
Nature's own nobleman, friendly and frank,
A man with his heart in his hand!

VIRTUE REWARDED.

On the third of January, during the cold which reigned so severely in Paris at the moment when the snow was falling in heavy flakes, a stoppage of passengers, horses, and vehicles took place suddenly at the corner of the Rue St. Honore and the Rue de Havre-Sec.

"What's the matter?" asked a young man, whose accent declared him to be an inhabitant of the south of France.

"I really can't inform you, monsieur. I was going to ask the question myself."

"It's only a man who has fallen on the ice," said an orange woman who had overheard the colloquy—"nothing more. Two sous apiece—come buy!"

"It's a man dead drunk," said a porter, making his way out of the crowd.

"Bah!" cried another man. "I bet it's one of those wretches who has overturned a cart and broken his leg, two years ago."

"No such thing," cried a stout man, carefully wrapped up in a thick woollen cloak, large handkerchief up to his nose, and his hand fixed in his side pockets. "It's no such thing. It's a man struck with cold and hunger. He is dying—that's evident enough! These things quite affect me! I should have stopped to lend him some assistance, but the fact is I am too late as it is. My wife is waiting dinner for me. Excuse me, monsieur, permit me to pass."

The stranger, however, to whom this request was addressed, pushed the stout man in the contrary direction, and pressed through the crowd of gazers until he arrived, not without difficulty, at the spot where the cause of this assemblage was lying. There, near the fountain, was extended on the ice an old man scarcely covered with a few rags. The stranger, yielding only to the dictates of a kind heart, stooped down, and was in the act of raising the unhappy man, when a cry broke the silence of the crowd, and a sweet voice exclaimed, "It's my poor old man!" At the same moment a young girl piercing the crowd, joined her feeble aid to that of the stranger.

"You know him, then?" he demanded, without looking at the new comer, but trying to prevent her from having any share of the burden.

"Yes and no, monsieur," she replied, taking out a smelling bottle. "I know him by sight, but am ignorant of his name."

A third person came to add his assistance to the efforts of the young people. "It is old Gerald!" he said. "He must have gone out this morning, the first for these four days. This way, monsieur," said he, speaking to the stranger, "he lives here, at number thirty, and I am the porter of the house. Come, let me take your place, my little woman," continued he to the young girl; "this gentleman and I can take him to his room in the top of the house. It is sheer want that has reduced him to this state. They say he was once rich, and I believe it; for it is only the rich, who allow themselves to famish from hunger when they are poor—we have still two stories to go up—I would not be guilty of such a foolish act; I would at once go to the Mayor and demand aid. Take care, the stairs are not steep; it is so dark here you can't well see it. It is different with me, I am used to the place. That's the door. Poor! He never ne[illegible] to ask [illegible] erty, poor man. [illegible] name. Diable! how cold it is up here under these tiles!"

They placed the old man on some straw in one corner of the room, and the stranger hastened to feel his pulse. "He is dying of cold and want," said he; "poor old friend, here's some money for you; I'll go up some soup, some wine, and a fire." The porter held out his hand for the money, when the stranger, suddenly exclaiming after having examined his pockets, "Good heavens, they have taken my purse!" and his features expressed most vividly vexation and fear for the old man's recovery.

"I will get them," cried a gentle voice; it was that of the young girl, who had followed them unperceived. She hurried out of the room, and returned speedily; she perceived that the slightest delay might be fatal. A woman followed her bringing fire and wood, with which she lit a fire in the [illegible] The young girl [illegible] a bottle of wine, [illegible] of a cup, which [illegible] the old man, [illegible] to his lips. [illegible] with a sigh, [illegible] his eyes, and [illegible] the stranger and [illegible] Who could this young creature be, who so eagerly and effectively devoted to a work of charity, where her own actions gave every indication of privation and penury? Cold as the weather was, the form which encircled her delicate and beautiful features was of black straw; the silk gloves, worn in several places, served to cover her hands, but certainly not to guarantee them from the cold. An old cashmere, worn to the last extremity, was thrown over a faded gown of dark silk, and her whole appearance betokened the absence of any warm garment. The young man would undoubtedly have been struck by the extreme beauty of her features had there been no other charm to attract him; but there was about her that indescribable something which pleases more than mere beauty—and that is, a union of goodness and elegance, which is, indeed, but seldom to be met with, but when seen is irresistible. At last her self-imposed task was over—she approached the old man, and, stooping down towards him, nodded her head kindly as she uttered the words, "I will soon return."

She then took up a small case which she had put down on her entrance, and, saluting the stranger, she left the room and descended the narrow stairs with a rapid step.

The young man gazed on her a moment, and then turned towards the invalid. "I, on the contrary, shall not return, for I leave Paris this evening; but you shall soon hear from me." He then pressed the old man's hand kindly and departed. When he emerged from the gateway of the house into the street, though hopeless of seeing his young assistant in the work of benevolence in which he had been engaged, he still could not avoid looking round to see if by chance she was still in sight. As chance would have it, she was standing, as if undecided, at the door of a jeweller's shop at some distance. At last she appeared to have formed her determination, for she [illegible] door and entered. Without exactly [illegible] the cause of his curiosity, the stranger approached the window of the shop, and observed what was going on within. He saw the young girl take off her cloak, and while he was admiring the [illegible] and aristocratic form of her figure, with some emotion, a [illegible] drew, and presented it to [illegible] master. He took it, examined it carefully, rubbed and tested the [illegible] mathematically took a small [illegible] and having ascertained the [illegible] customer a price, which [illegible] she accepted, from the [illegible] with which she bent [illegible] jeweller opened a drawer, [illegible] some money, which he [illegible] counted; and having written [illegible] and address, he cast [illegible] drawer, amongst a [illegible] sorts and colors. The [illegible] and in a minute afterwards entered the shop.

[illegible] afterwards she turned [illegible] house, in one of the [illegible] St. Honore; and opened [illegible] room on the rue de [illegible] entered hastily, crying: [illegible] mother. You must have [illegible] long absence?"

[illegible] the person to whom [illegible] were addressed, appeared in [illegible] more trouble than from [illegible] was stretched on a sofa, and [illegible] ill health. Her features, [illegible] and an appearance of [illegible] daughter entered, and [illegible] became more sombre [illegible]

[illegible] she. "I have an unpleasant news to acquaint you [illegible] perhaps that made me [illegible] return, than take note of your [illegible] absence."

Anna, having cast on a chair her shawl and bonnet, immediately seated herself on a low stool near the end of the sofa which supported her mother's head. The latter placed her hand affectionately over the hair of her daughter, and then continued:

"You know that your father had promised your hand to the son of M. Barsac, of Bordeaux, his oldest friend. The death of your father—the lengthened illness which has so much reduced me—had not overcome my courage, as long as I could live in the hope of seeing you one day rich and [illegible] under the protection of a worthy [illegible] This very morning the scaffolding [illegible] happiness, which I loved so much to [illegible] up for you, fell to the ground. This letter, addressed to our old habitation, [illegible] to have come to hand yesterday. [illegible] read for yourself."

Anna took the letter which her mother held out to her, and looking at the signature remarked: "It is from Jules Barsac himself." She then read the contents which he proceeded to read aloud. After having specified the little property of the bridegroom, he went on to speak of the fortune of the lady: "Madame Revial makes over to her daughter the sum of [illegible],000 per year—"

"You are making a mistake, monsieur," interrupted Madame Revial; "formerly, indeed, I did intend—"

The notary, without paying any attention to the interruption, continued:—"$1,000 a year, arising from money in the public funds, for which here are the securities."

Saying this, he displayed the coupons on the table, and Madame Revial, the daughter, and Jules Barsac, all made a movement as if about to speak, when the aged stranger arose and made a sign for them to remain silent. Surprised at this interference they awaited with interest the result of this strange scene.

"What!" said the old man, with a broken voice, and addressing Anna, "what, mademoiselle, do you not remember your poor old man?"

While she was looking earnestly at him, trying to read in his venerable countenance the traces of misery and suffering, he continued:

"You have, then, forgotten ten years of daily kindness? You have forgotten the third of January, with the assistance you gave so opportunely—the fire, the wine, and the wing of a fowl wrapped up in a piece of newspaper? All forgotten? Well, that very piece of newspaper is the cause of all my misery being at an end. In an advertisement which it bore, I read the intelligence that a French gentleman named Francois de Chazel, had been for years seeking in vain for his brother, Jacques de Chazel, ruined, like him, in the revolution; and that, by his will, he had ordered an advertisement to be inserted every week for three years that the brother might come [illegible] his ample fortune. [illegible] de Chazel stands now before [illegible]

"[illegible] day I set out for London, [illegible] yesterday. Yesterday," [illegible] the speaking to Madame Revial, [illegible] from him I heard of the intended [illegible] your daughter. To that [illegible] I owe my life, and the least I can do [illegible] with a part of this fortune [illegible] her, never would have [illegible]

"[illegible]," said Madame Revial, [illegible] "perhaps you have a [illegible]" replied he, bowing low [illegible] me into [illegible] our family [illegible] they both signed the marriage [illegible] Formed under such auspices, who can doubt that it was a happy [illegible]

VOCAL MUSIC CONDUCTIVE TO HEALTH.—I was the opinion of Dr. Rush that singing by young ladies, whom the customs of society debar from many other kinds of healthy exercise, should be cultivated not as an accomplishment, but as a means of preserving health. He particularly insisted that vocal music should never be neglected in the education of a young lady; and it was his opinion that besides its salutary operation in soothing the cares of domestic life, it has a still more direct and important effect. "I here introduce a fact," says Dr. Rush, "which has been suggested to me by my profession: "that is, the exercise of the organs of the breast by singing contributes very much to defend them from those diseases to which the climate and other causes expose them. The Germans are seldom afflicted with consumption, nor have I ever known more than one case of spitting blood amongst them. This, I believe, is in part occasioned by the strength which their lungs acquire by exercising them frequently in vocal music, which constitutes an essential branch of their education." "The music-master of our Academy," says Gardner, "has furnished me with an observation still more in favor of this opinion. He informs me that he had known several instances of persons strongly disposed to consumption, restored to health by the exercise of the lungs in singing." In the new establishment of infant schools for children of three and four years of age, everything is taught by the aid of song. Their little lessons, their recitations, their arithmetical countings, are all chanted; and as they feel the importance of their own voices when joined together, they emulate each other in the power of vociferating. This exercise is found to be very beneficial to their health. Many instances have occurred of weakly children, of two or three years of age, who could scarcely support themselves, having become robust and healthy by this constant exercise of the lungs. These results are perfectly philosophical. Singing tends to expand the chest, and this increases the activity and powers of the vital organs.

Many a mother grows old, faded, and feeble long before her time, because her boys and girls are not thoughtfully considerate and helpful. When they become old enough to be of service in a household mother has become so used to doing all herself; to taking upon her shoulders all the care, that she forgets to lay off the burden little by little, on those who are so well able to bear it. It is partly her own fault, to be sure, but a fault compounded of love and mistaken kindness for her children.

"Good morning Mr. Smith; on the sick list to-day?"

"Yes, sir; got the ague."

"Do you ever shake?"

"Yes."

"When do you shake again?"

"Can't say when; shake every day. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothing in particular, only I thought if you shook bad, I'd like to stand by and see if you could not shake the fifteen dollars out of your pocket which you owed me so long."

Jules Isserio is defended by a Chicago lawyer on the ground that, in accordance with Christ's own teaching, there was no fault in proclaiming his identity, nor expectation that anybody could harm him.

Edward Everett Hale reiterates Bulwer's assertion that three hours of daily brain work is enough to get from a man the best that is in him.

WIT, HUMOR AND SENTIMENT.

Snooks' wife loves to make bread, because it cleans her hands beautifully.

Life is a romance of which a coquette never tires of turning over a new leaf.

An Irishman's description of making a pump: "Take a long hole and pour brass round it."

"Is there a word in the English language that contains all the vowels?" Yes, unwestionably."

Most Golden Calves, when thrown into the crucible of Time, turn out no better than Pigs of Lead!

Life is full of contradictions—but woman takes very good care that we shall never hear the last of it.

A young man, who has recently taken a wife, says he did not find it half so hard to get married as he did to get furniture.

"Say, my little son, where does the right hand road go?" "Don't know, sir; I ain't been nowhere since we lived here."

A farmer when flagellating two of his unruly boys, was asked what he was doing? "Thrashing wild oats," was his reply.

She appeared so warmly to feel, at length exclaimed with spirit, "If you love me, why tell me so; but don't dirty my stockings!"

A lawyer's carriage is only a legal conveyance and it is the client, as often as it stops at his door, who pays for the drawing up of it.

There is no better stomachic than a good curry. You may curry a fowl, chicken, or rabbit; and, if you desire a first-rate appetite, curry a horse.

"What boxes govern the world?" asked a New York paper. It answered the question thus: "The cartridge box, the ballot box, the jury box, and the band box."

A certain gallant editor thinks when a single gentleman can't pass a clothes line without counting all the long stockings, it is a sign he ought to get married, and the sooner the better.

"Wasn't that a waste of powder?" said an Irishman to a Kentuckian, who had just brought a coon to the ground with his rifle, from a large tree. "Why so?" asked the hunter. "Sure the fall would a kilt him."

Formerly women were prohibited from marrying until they had spun a set of bed furniture, and hence were entitled spinsters until married. A morose old bachelor at our elbow remarked: "Now a days they spin street yarn?"

"Dr. Porson," said a gentleman to the great "Grecian," with whom he had been disputing—"Dr. Porson, my opinion of you is most contemptible." "Sir," returned the doctor, "I never knew an opinion of yours that was not contemptible."

Widow Grizzle's husband lately died of cholera. In the midst of the most acute bodily pain, after the hand of death had touched him, and while writhing in agony, his gentle wife said to him, "Well, Mr. Grizzle, you needn't kick round so, and wear all the sheets out, if you are dying!"

"You are from the country, are you not, sir?" said a dandy clerk in a book store, to a handsomely dressed Quaker, who had given him some trouble. "Yes." "Well, here is an essay on the rearing of calves." "Thee," said Aminidab, as he turned to leave the store, "thee had better present to thy mother."

"Well, Bridget, did you put the blister on your chest, as I told you, and did it rise?" "Och, mistress, dear! niver a chist did I have to put it on; but, shure, ma'am, I have a hair trunk, and I stuck it on that; but sorry a rise did it riz; but ma'am, it tuck off ivery bit of hair, as shure as I'm a sinner!"

A country schoolmaster, happening to be reading of the curious skin of an elephant. "Did you ever see an elephant skin?" he asked. "I have!" shouted a little six year old" at the foot of the class. "Where?" he asked, quite amused at the boy's earnestness. "On the elephant!" said he, with a most provoking grin.

It is generally admitted that the Irish are most famous for making bulls, but the Dutch can go ahead for making pigs. For instance:

I've got a pig cat and I've got a pig dog,
I've got a pig calf and I've got a pig hog,
I've got a pig baby, so pig and so tall,
And I've got a pig wife that's pigger than all.

Rev. Dr. Woods, of Andover, was once giving his class some instructions about preaching in such a manner as to gain attraction and applause. "Young gentlemen," said he, "it's all contained in a nutshell. When you go to preach in the city, take your best coat; but when you go to preach in the country, take your best sermon."

A certain judge was reprimanding an attorney for bringing several small suits into court, and remarked that it would have been much better for all parties had he persuaded his clients to leave their causes to the arbitration of two or three honest men. "Please your honor," retorted the lawyer, "we do not choose to trouble honest men with them."

A cabin boy on board a ship, the captain of which was a religious man was called up to be whipped for some misdemeanor. Little Jack went crying and trembling and said to the captain, "Pray, sir, will you wait till I say my prayers?" "Yes," was the stern reply. "Well, then," said Jack, looking up and smiling triumphantly, "I'll say them when I get ashore."

A humorous fellow, subpœnaed as a witness on a trial for an assault, one of the counsel, who was notorious for brow beating witnesses, asked him what distance he was from the parties when the assault happened. He answered: "Just four feet five inches and a half." "How came you to be so exact?" said the counsel. "Because I expected some fool or other would ask me, and I measured it."

Sydney Smith says he heard of a clergyman who went jogging along the road till he came to a turnpike. "What is to pay?" "Pay, sir, for what?" asked the turnpike man. "Why, for my horse, to be sure." "Your horse, sir, what horse? There is no horse, sir." "No horse?" said he, suddenly looking down between his legs. "God bless me! I thought I was on horseback!"

The residence of an Omaha woman consists of an old organ box, with a dry goods box for an extension, and a broken milk can in one side for an oven.

THE CHRONICLE.

BRIDGEPORT, SEPTEMBER 12, 1885.

PALMER & REY, 405-407 Sansome street.

The great yacht race between the English yacht Genesta and the American sloop yacht Puritan commenced off Sandy Hook, New York, on Monday for that great prize, the "America Cup." They ran only twenty miles on their course owing to light winds, and it was plainly seen that the Puritan was too much for the Genesta. The further sailing was postponed till Tuesday, and the yachts were towed to the Horseshoe. On Tuesday the yachts collided, the Genesta having her bowsprit broken, and the Puritan had her mainsail badly torn, so the race was again put off until damages are repaired, and the race may not come off for a week. The Puritan having been in the wrong the Judges ruled her out and informed the owner of the Genesta that he could "go it alone," but he refused, as he wanted a race, and not a "walk over." The owner of the Puritan acknowledged to having been in the wrong and offered to pay all damages.

The State Fair is now in full tide of success, and will continue one week longer. After this year the Directors should make arrangements to keep the Fair open one month. There are hundreds of farmers in this State who are in the midst of their harvest at this time and unable to attend a State Fair, while they would do so were it continued into the first week in October. If the Mechanics' Institute can run their Fair a month, why should not the State Agricultural Society be able to do so? We hope the Society will think over our suggestion and give it a trial next year.

While most school districts have a heap of trouble over the selection of a teacher, the people of Genoa, Nev., are having a school war because they have too many teachers, the new Trustees, who are thought to have been unconstitutionally elected, hired a male teacher, and the old Board selected a female teacher. The new Board had a guard stationed around the school house until the Sheriff took possession of the key of the building. The Supreme Court will have to settle the fuss.

An attempt was made on Wednesday night to burn Capt G. L. Porter's property at Bodie, but the firemen promptly put out the fire before much damage was done; The Miner pretends to believe that it was not the work of an incendiary. What nonsense.

The undertaker's bill for Grant's funeral is $14,162 75.

BRIDGEPORT, SEPTEMBER 12, 1885.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Personal.

Gay E. Porter, of the El Paso (Texas) Lone Star, and son of Capt. G. L. Porter, arrived here on Saturday evening last on a short visit to his parents, after an absence of many years.

Assessor McAlpin on Monday left for Montana to take a look at that country

Treasurer Tinkum and R. S. Miner drove down to Antelope on Monday, returning on Wednesday.

Mrs. Hattie Dunham is visiting friends at Bodie.

Supervisor Goodnow, Dan. M. Bernett and S. Frost came up from Antelope on Sunday.

Nick Baule, of Bodie, passed through town on Tuesday, en route home from Sonora.

Miss Mamie Parker, daughter of W. O. Parker, departed for San Francisco on Wednesday to attend school.

Tax Collector Montrose went to Bodie on Wednesday, and will probably take a run over to Lundy, to visit his family, before returning to the county seat.

Wilson E. Elliott, of Merced, E. R. Elliott, of Lodi, brothers of W. T. Elliott, and Wayne Rudy and wife (Mr. Elliott's sister) arrived a few days ago to visit Wm. T. E. R. brought over a band of horses and cattle for the Elliott ranch.

M. F. Tarpey, one of the Democratic war horses of this State, has been in town a few days, buying horses and cattle, and getting his large band of cattle together to drive out of the mountains.

Photographer Hanson and wife are in town for a few days, so "Secure the shadow ere the substance fades."

Jos. Carney, of Antelope, has been in town a few days.

SERENADED.—On Sunday evening last the Bridgeport Brass Band serenaded Miss Mamie Parker on the eve of her departure for San Francisco to attend school. As the little Miss assisted at the late entertainment for the benefit of the Band, the compliment was well merited.

The Band also serenaded Gay E. Porter, who arrived on Saturday evening from El Paso, Texas, on a visit to his parents, Capt. and Mrs. George L. Porter. After playing "Home Sweet Home," etc., they were invited in and partook of cake and wine. After a few moments spent in social converse, the Band retired and finished their Sunday evening concert, playing remarkably well.

ACCIDENT.—On Thursday evening, while John D. Murphy was riding on Main street, the horse fell and Murphy sustained a sprained ankle and some severe bruises on the right leg. Dr. Sinclair attended the sufferer, who is getting along nicely. Mr. Murphy was about ready to return to Berkeley to resume his studies at the State University, but this mishap will detain him a short time. This warns our readers that they should insure against accidents in the Travelers' Accident Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn. For particulars inquire at the CHRONICLE-UNION office.

We condense the following from the Candelaria True Fissure of Saturday last:

The miners and mining companies have not yet come to an understanding in regard to wages. The Holmes ore is too low grade to allow the company to pay more than $3 a day to miners, and if that rate is not accepted the mine will probably remain closed. In the meantime the families of many of the miners are in destitute circumstances, and the general business of the town is dead.

A strange disease has broken out among the Pintes at Belleville, and it is hoped it will drive them to the reservation to die.

D. D. Murphy, foreman of the Holmes, was examined for shooting James Carrigan, a miner, and discharged. Carrigan having been the aggressor. Carrigan was shot in the face, but he will recover.

H. E. Wright, druggist, at the old Bodie Pharmacy, Bodie, carries much the largest and best selected stock of drugs, medicines and toilet articles, trusses, shoulder braces, etc., etc., in Mono county. Purity and accuracy guaranteed in the preparation of physicians' prescriptions. Orders from the country filled with care and dispatch.

Goodson's Ore Pulverizer,

THE JUGGERNAUT.

PATENTED OCTOBER 7, 1884.

ONE THOUSAND PER CENT. MORE ECONOMICAL than any ore reducing machine ever before invented.

A sixty-horse-power machine pulverizes 1,000 TONS of ore in twenty-four hours.

The attention of mining men and all persons who are interested in mining industries, is most respectfully called to the JUGGERNAUT ORE PULVERIZER, and those contemplating the erection of any kind of reduction works will do well to thoroughly examine the JUGGERNAUT before purchasing or erecting any other kind of quartz mill; in fact, those using stamps will find it a great saving to discontinue their use, and put JUGGERNAUT in their place. It is the most durable, simple in construction, inexpensive to operate, and capable of producing the greatest results of any ore pulverizing machine ever before known. There is no loss of time, like the stamp battery, and no waste of power whatever; hence, with the JUGGERNAUT, it is easy to pulverize from five to SIXTY TONS per hour at a cost of not more than 25 cents per ton in any case, which will be reduced in proportion as the capacity is increased.

What the cotton gin is to the planter; the reaping machine to the farmer; the sewing machine to the seamstress and tailor; the railroad and telegraph to the merchant and commercial man, the JUGGERNAUT ORE PULVERIZER will prove to be to the miner.

THE COUNTRY.

By M. J. Hughes.

I love its mountains to explore,
And I love its shade so cool;
I love its valleys and its flow'rs,
I love the country and its hills;
I love to breathe its air so pure,
Its gushing fountains I adore;
I love its streams, shallow and deep,
I love its harvests so rich to reap;
I love it fields and meadows green,
Where the skylark's song is heard;
I love to range among its bowers,
Where in safety the cooing pigeons nest.
I love the country, its pure air,
What nature has so richly given,
I love simple things, both great and small,
And the country, that's where I live.

A LAWYER'S STORY.

A client of the law firm with which I was connected in Lincoln, Neb., had died, leaving a very large property, worth nearly half a million dollars, to be held in trust until the heir or heirs could be discovered.

I was anxious to find the heir, not only for pecuniary motives, but because I was made deeply interested in the early life and fate of a story which the client, Marvin Gray, had told to me on the day of his death. His breath was almost spent when I stood by his bedside and listened attentively to catch the low sound of his voice as he whispered the sad tale of an erring son whom he had driven from his home in England. He had sent him from his home one dark night, twelve years before, because of his drunken habits, and he had never seen him since. He had heard from him but once in all these long years; then he was an officer aboard a ship plying between Liverpool and New York. Though he had searched the world over he could get no clue of his son, and finally worn out by incessant grief and traveling, he lay down to die in Western strangers, to die without having accomplished the one great desire of his aching heart.

As the death dew was gathering on his brow, he turned to me and, with an indescribable look of anguish, asked me to swear to take up the search where he left it, and devote my time and money to the finding of his son, if living. I should receive twenty thousand dollars when he was found. Young and romantic, my sympathies were fully aroused; so with my hand clasped in the nervous grasp of the dying man, I promised never to give up the search until the last one was found.

Mr. Gray had made such a disposition of his property that I could draw my traveling expenses; so I commenced the important task the day after his untimely death.

I took the cars at Lincoln, and was soon in Crete, a small station on the Nebraska. Here I changed to the stage coach bound for Hobler's ranche, fifteen miles to the north. As we were traveling along at a rate of speed for which Western stage coaches are renowned, I tried to shape some definite course to pursue, and had almost decided to retrace my journey to Lincoln and start for the Eastern States, when my thoughts were diverted from the subject by the sudden upsetting of the lumbering vehicle. We had been threading our way around the edge of a gulch, when the shying of one of the horses sent the coach and contents in a heap to the bottom. I was conscious of falling, and then all was blank.

When I recovered my consciousness I was in a pleasant though plainly furnished room, through the door of which I could see a pale-faced woman sewing near a table. At the same time she was sweetly humming a baby song and rocking an old-fashioned cradle with her foot. It was an interesting picture, and made me think of my own childhood, with my mother singing me to sleep. I tried to think how I came to be there, and wondered if I had died and was in Heaven.

As my thoughts turned to myself I tried to rise, when an acute pain in my side made me cry out in agony. Then the sweet face of the woman was over my pillow, and tender eyes looked pityingly into mine as she asked me if I felt much pain. Her voice was low and sweet, made me forget my suffering, and I asked where I was and how I came there.

"Don't you remember your leaving for the gulch with the stage coach yesterday?" she asked.

"Oh, now I remember. I recollect I was going to Hobler's ranche when we were all tipped into that ravine and I fell."

"No, not killed," she said in a soothing, serious tone; but in your fall Mr. Marvin brought you near to death's door, and to life, for you were not expected to live when he got you out of the ravine."

I was going to question her further, but she said I must not talk any more, and I never left me.

The following weeks were spent in alternate suffering and pleasure. I suffered all that could be endured, and the happy hours were passed in the society of the kind man and woman who had taken me in, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin, who had been driven from their home in England on account of the former's dissipated habits, and had settled in the gulch.

Near the end of [illegible] accident and I began to recover. [illegible] to converse with [illegible] this afternoon, [illegible] of my system, I could [illegible] My recovery was [illegible] was compelled to keep to my bed, but at last I was permitted to sit up, bolstered by pillows, in the big arm-chair.

One day, while sitting [illegible] Mrs. Wardie, my nurse, at her work, [illegible] she and her husband came to settle in such a wild country. She replied that it was a long story, and might excite me too much; but I assured her that it would not do so. She paused for a moment, and then said:—

"When I promised to be Marvin's wife he was a sailor, on shore for a short vacation. He was not rich, but we loved each other, and were full of hope for the future. Marvin was to make one more trip to Liverpool, and then return and make me his wife. We parted, both vowing to remain true to our love vows. But he had not been away a week before mother was taken seriously ill, our horse was stolen, and I was broke up so he could not work. I had to do my share into the house, but I could not earn bread enough for the little brothers and sisters, and they, the youngest [illegible] mother must have. I was in great [illegible] my father's employer, to [illegible] of our need, [illegible] food for the children. I was grateful for his kindness, but [illegible] me to marry him. I fled from his presence. He sought me again, and said: 'For the sake of your father and your mother, Jenny, can you not be my wife?' I thought of my own away on the sea, and my heart made me say no. Then came the news of a terrible storm at sea, and several [illegible] those that had gone down was Mr. [illegible] not renewed his [illegible] and commanded him. I could not [illegible] Marvin's love. [illegible] but when she looked into my eyes I knew she wanted me to [illegible] sake. Though my heart would break I could not refuse [illegible] over and promised to [illegible] my heart was on the [illegible]

"The day appointed for the wedding came, and everything was ready [illegible] been bidden, [illegible] guests, and floors prepared for active feet. We were to be married at the church, then go for the grand feast to Mr. Ennot's house. I was sitting mournfully at the window of my little room all dressed and ready to go, when I saw my Marvin approaching. I could hardly believe my eyes till he said, 'I have come back to save you, Jennie,' and as he took me from the window in his great, strong arms, and pressed me to his breast, I forgot the sorrow of the past, and laughed and cried for joy.

Mrs. Wardie stopped for a moment to brush away the tears that the memory of that meeting brought to her eyes, then continued:—

"Marvin had heard in the village below of the reported loss of his ship, and of my approaching marriage, and had lost no time in coming to me. Once in his presence I could not resist him, so away we went to be married, and, just as Mr. Ennot and his friends came, we were pronounced man and wife.

"I can never forget the scene that followed. Mr. Ennot stamped and swore, and called his name in his awful anger; then turning to Marvin, as we were leaving the church, he raised his hand towards heaven and swore a fearful vow of eternal hatred for us both. I was badly frightened, but Marvin thought it only an idle threat, and soon forgot it. My parents would have nothing to do with me, and so we went to work in a large factory in a neighboring city. We were doing well till Mr. Ennot found us out and influenced our employer so that we were discharged. We then moved to a little town in a distant State, and had just got nicely settled when Mr. Ennot again found us out—so we lost that situation. We commenced in another and then another, but with the same result. Mr. Ennot was rich, and followed us from place to place, using his money in circulating stories that proved us of work, and made honest people turn from us. Oh, those were dark days indeed," she exclaimed, and again stopped to control her emotion.

I heard and the tears running down my cheeks while listening to her low tones [illegible] spoke of moving, then again the [illegible] would hastily brush within my veins [illegible] telling of the persecutions [illegible] from Ennot. But I was all [illegible] which she continued:

"We tried different factories in all parts of the country, but it was no use. The unrelenting hate of that man followed us like a curse, and for four years we were constantly moving from one town to another. At last we left the East, changed our name and settled here in the wild West, so far away from my dear old home and friends."

At the mention of the old home, convulsive sobs choked her utterance, and it was [illegible] before she resumed her interesting story.

"Under our new name, we were safe from discovery, and would have done very well if Marvin had been experienced in the work but he was not used to the country, and did not succeed as well as others have. Then baby was born, my health became poor, and I could not help longing for a look into my dear old mother's face. Marvin, too, who was driven from his father's house twelve years ago for dissipated habits, wished to hear from home again. He wrote two letters last year, but as he received no answer, he now thinks his father is dead, for Mr. Gray was old.

"Gray?" I asked, interrupting her.

"Yes. Marvin Gray, my husband's father," she replied, wondering at my growing excitement.

"Was it Marvin Gray of Highcliff Castle, Hampshire, England?" I questioned, hardly able to keep my seat.

"The very same."

"Then I have been searching for your husband. Marvin Gray is dead, but long before he died he forgave his son, and was searching for him, that he might tell him he was forgiven, and give him a father's blessing."

Marvin came in from his work just in time to hear this of his father, and dropping on his knees beside his wife, who had borne so much for his sake, he poured forth a fervent prayer to the One who had guided and watched over them through all the long, dreary years of their wanderings.

But little more remains to be told. They easily proved their identity, and received the property which belonged to them. And had you kind reader, gone with them to that Eastern State, you might have witnessed a joyful meeting, when the daughter, so long out for, returned to her aged parent's home, where they now reside, having no fears of molestation from Mr. Ennot, who choked to death during an encounter he had with the end of a rope in the hands of an infuriated people among whom he had been living, away on the Western border.

FOR PARENTS.—The ordination of Providence says a distinguished writer, is that home should form our character. The first object of parents should be to make home interesting. It is a bad sign whenever children have to wander from parental roof for amusement. Provide pleasure for them around their own fireside and among themselves. The excellent Leigh Richmond pursued this plan—had a museum in his house and exerted every nerve to interest his little flock. A love of home is one of the greatest safeguards in the world of man. Implant this sentiment early in a child, it is a mighty preservative against vice.

THE Jews had no surnames, nor had the early Greeks and Romans. Latterly the Romans used three names; the first corresponding to our Christian name, the second the class or rank name, and the third the family name. Modern surnames began to be used about the tenth century, when nobles took the name of their estates; middle class sons of their fathers, as Johnson, Thompson, etc., and others of trades, as Smith, Cooper, Tailor, etc. Fancy names also were given to foundlings, and nicknames became surnames.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES.

CORN-STARCH CAKE.—Whites of five eggs, half cup of butter, one cup of sugar, one cup of flour, half cup of corn starch, half cup of sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, one teaspoonful of soda.

POTATO NOODLES.—Grate one dozen of boiled potatoes, add two eggs, a little salt, one-half cup of milk, enough flour to knead stiff, then cut in small pieces, and roll long and round, one inch thick; fry in plenty lard to a nice brown.

POTATO PUDDING.—One pound of potatoes, boiled, half a pound of fresh butter, half a pound of sugar, the yolks of six eggs and whites of three, one gill of cream, one gill of wine, one teaspoonful of mace, and one nutmeg. Bake in puff-paste.

CRACKER PIES.—Take six soda crackers pounded and mashed in two cups of cold water for twenty minutes, the rind and juice of two lemons, two and a half cups of white sugar; mix well together; bake in puff-paste; this quantity will make three pies, and taste like green apples.

MEAT LOAF.—Chop fine whatever cold meat you may have, fat and lean together; add pepper and salt, one finely chopped onion, two slices of bread which have been soaked in milk and one egg. Mix well together and bake in a form. This makes an admirable tea or breakfast dish.

RICH NEW ENGLAND COOKIES.—One tea-cup of butter, two of sugar, two eggs, a teaspoonful of saleratus dissolved in a cup of milk, half a grated nutmeg, or two tablespoonfuls of caraway seed, and sufficient flour to roll them out easily. Mix and bake the same as plain cookies.

SAUCE FOR PUDDING.—Two cups of brown sugar, two cups of water, half a teaspoonful of salt, butter size of an egg, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one of flour; flavoring, beat well together before adding the water, which should be hot; then let it boil for a half minute or longer.

APPLE FRUIT CAKE.—One cup of butter, two of sugar and one of milk, two eggs, teaspoonful of soda, three and a half cups of flour, two of raisins, three of dried apples soaked over night, and then chopped fine and stewed two hours in two cups of molasses; beat butter and sugar to a cream, add milk, in which dissolve soda, then the beaten eggs and flour, and lastly the raisins and apples well stirred in; pour in pan and bake one and a half hours.

MINCE MEAT.—Two pounds of lean beef boiled tender and chopped fine; two pounds of beef suet, minced to powder; five pounds of apples, pared and chopped fine; three pounds of raisins chopped; three-quarters of a pound of citron, cut fine; one grated nutmeg; two tablespoonfuls of mace, two of cinnamon, one of cloves, one of allspice, one teaspoonful of fine salt; two and one half pounds brown sugar; one quart of good whisky.

POTATO CAKES.—Take potatoes—mashed ones are best, but boiled ones can be mashed—immediately after dinner, before getting too cold; add about an equal amount of flour and a small piece of butter or lard; rub thoroughly together, roll out and cut as for biscuit—not too thick, and bake in a rather quick oven. When done so a light brown, cut open, butter and eat warm. They are delicious.

AN EASY RECIPE FOR BREAD.—Mix one spoonful of flour, half an ounce of yeast, half a pint of warm water, and two well-boiled potatoes; let the mixture stand two hours to ferment; then add two pounds of flour, and strain it all; add enough water to make it into dough, and bake for about an hour. The addition of a little butter makes the crust more crisp.

FRENCH BREAD.—With a quart to a peck of fine flour mix the yolks of three and the whites of two eggs, beaten and strained; a little salt, half a pint of good yeast, that is not bitter, and as much milk, made a little warm, as will work into a thin, light dough. Stir it about, but do not knead it. Have ready three quart wooden dishes, divide the dough among them, set it to rise, then turn them out into the oven, which must be quick. Rasp when done.

QUEEN OF ALL PUDDINGS.—One pint of nice fine bread-crumbs, one quart of milk, one cup of sugar, the yolks of four eggs beaten with the grated rind of a lemon, butter the size of an egg. Bake until done, but not watery. Whip the whites of the eggs stiff, and beat in a teacup of sugar in which has been stirred the juice of a lemon, spread over the pudding a layer of jelly or any sweetmeat you prefer, and pour the whites of the eggs over that, and bake a light brown. To be eaten cold with cream.

EVERTON TAFFY.—Melt in a shallow vessel one-fourth of a pound of butter and add to it one pound of brown sugar. Stir them together for fifteen minutes, or until a little of the mixture dropped into a basin of cold water will break clean between the teeth without sticking to them. Any flavoring that is desired, as lemon, pine-apple, or vanilla, should be added just before the cooking is complete. The taffy when done should be poured into a shallow dish, which is buttered on the bottom and edges. By drawing a knife across it when it is partially cool, it can easily be broken into squares. Molasses may be used instead of sugar in making taffy, but it is [illegible]
